Judy's work shows sensitivity to light, shadow and composition and has a wonderful ethereal quality.

—John Ebner, Past President of the Northwest Watercolor Society

Whether city streets, misty Northwest scenes, or paintings drawn from trip abroad, Judy captures a magical essence in her paintings. Her subjects, her color and design all unite in a lasting moment.

—Caroline Buchanan, teacher of watercolor for 35 years, past president of the Watercolor Society of Oregon and a Signature member of the Northwest Watercolor Society.

Born and raised in rural Washington State, I've always had a deep appreciation for being surrounded by nature's beauty and splendor. For twelve years I worked as a travel consultant and was fortunate to have opportunities to see many disparate parts of the world—the satisfactions I get from exploring the world are evident in my work. My lifetime companions include my husband (Ken), our two grown children (Stacey and David), a grandson (Alex) and our cat Simon. Other interests include Golf, Bridge and I still enjoy traveling as time permits.

Faced with the proverbial empty nest, I was able to pursue a passion to paint and began studying the basic techniques of watercolor in 2000. From there my interests moved to color and composition and I was able to study numerous times over the years with inspiring San Juan Islands Artist/Instructor Caroline Buchanan. In addition, I've had the opportunity to attend workshops by other great artists I admire, including Joseph Zbukvic, Alvaro Castagnet, Skip Lawrence, Christopher Schink, Tom Schaller, and most recently Jane Hofstetter.

As the years have progressed, my personal style of soft, often muted colors has slowly emerged.

Sunlight and shadows are my main sources of inspiration because they fuel the form and drama of my watercolor work. Colors brought to life by water, isn't that a wonderful notion? I love their organic translucence and the interest and excitement of the intermingled hues.

I'm looking forward to exploring the colors and scenery in my new surroundings, here in the Southwest.
