

P.J. Lenorovitz Biography

PJ spent her formative years in a small Colorado mountain community. The grand mountain vistas, the delicate beauty of the columbine, and the secrets of the pine forests inspired in her the need to capture and share the beauties of the earth through the use of charcoal, ink, pencil and oil paints. Her experiences with animals, especially horses (she competed vigorously and joyfully in rodeos in those days), helped her to develop an instinctual understanding of line and color that served her well when she went on to study art at Loretto Heights College in Denver, where she earned a BFA, and later at the Milan Art Institute in Queen Creek, Arizona. The desire to capture in paint a person's or animal's energy and life force, or the spirit of tranquility in a mountain valley motivates her now much as it did then.

These days she works in oils and mixed media. The richness and depth of oils never cease to amaze her and inspire her to learn ever more in how to use them. And mixed media adds dimensions to her ideas that often surprise her. Art is, for her, a never-ending discovery.

PJ resides with her husband in San Tan Valley, Arizona. She knows she is incredibly lucky to have her biggest fan as her life partner. Their dogs, Dax and Reba, are happy to add their unconditional support as well.

For questions please call or write.

Contact: e-mail: pjlenorovitzartist@aol.com

phone: 303-910-8167